G. F. Swift's Maxims.

G. F. Swift's Maxims.

The late G. F. Swift, the big meat packer of Chicago, was fond of a few sententious sayings which summed up his business philosophy. Most successful men, who have made their own carcers, generally have in their minds sayings like Mr. Swift's. The late M. De-Blowitz, the celebrated journalist and correspondent of the London Times was fond of pointing out that a man's success in life depends upon his willingness to "take the trouble"; of, as others have said, to take pains. Some of Mr. Swift's maxims, not all of them, are worth noting:—

maxims, not all of them, are worth noting:—

Every time a man loses his temper he loses his head, and when he loses his head he loses several chances.

Next to knowing your own business, it's a mighty good thing to know as much about your neighbor's as possible, specially if he is in the same line.

The richer a man gets, the more careful he should be to keep his head level.

The best a man ever did shouldn't be his standard for the rest of his life.

You can never make a big success working for anybody else.

the power of turning resolutely from the depressing and dwelling on the attractive and hopeful.

How important this power, and how great the need of increasing it is, may be perceived if it be considered that the control over thought is perhaps the greatest factor over which the individual has domination, not alone in making himself happy but in making him a contributor to the happiness of others. It is within the range of ordinary observation to see two men who are equally blossed in health, strength, intelligence and the fundamentals of character, and yet one is wretched and a burden to his companions, while the other is a blesscompanions, while the other is a bless ing to his family and friends and at the same time gets real satisfaction from life and its duties. And yet the only difference between the two is the power one has over his thoughts, which is the resolt of resolution adhered to steadily and constantly until a habit is formed that changes his character and his influ-ence upon others for the better. This power to dismiss the unpleasant. the exil aspect of life, the communing with the high, helpful thoughts; the stablishment of mental self-restrain and self-guidance in meditation, is a very different thing from the habit of constan celf-analysis and introspection which is the mark of morbid, self-conscious, subective personality. It should be the aim o avoid too much self-examination and o strive to look at the bright and hope for side of all things. So vital is this disposition to shun the dark aspects of existence, and of the ordinary concerns of life that a moral philosopher has said wisely that the happiness of man depends less on "the amount of pleasurable or

An Example for Office Boys.

"Be good to the office boy," is a moral caught by the career of William Alden Smith. He had saved a little money an wanted a place to study Blackstone. This was in 1879. He thought first of Chicago, and even went so far as to go to that city and apply for a place as office boy in the firm of Walker & Dexter. He remarked repeatedly that such a thing had never happened in his experience before; for, he said, he could feel a breath of wind before the leaves felt it, and there had been no wind. He feared that it was a warning of some disaster about to overtake their party.

The disaster was not for them. On that evening occurred the earthquake which destroyed the distant city of Mendosa and crushed twelve thousand people to death beneath the ruins. That the subterranean wave extended east of the
